

Pedernales River

The upper reaches of the Pedernales River are generally too shallow for recreational use, but the middle and lower reaches of the river provide good white water, especially during periods of high runoff. Two parks have been established along the Pedernales: Pedernales Falls State Park and Lyndon B. Johnson State Historical Park. The Pedernales has been dammed near Johnson City to form Johnson City Lake.

